

'A' Battery Memorial

Prior to Federation in 1901 each of the Australian colonies maintained its own defence force. These forces were largely comprised of part-time volunteers and a small number of permanent officers and men. This memorial is to the men of Queensland's permanent force - 'A' Battery, Queensland Artillery. It was erected in 1886 and is constructed from Oamaru limestone.

All of those named on the memorial died while serving in the Battery, but only one, Driver Sydney Walker, died while on active service. Walker was serving with the 1st Queensland Contingent to the South African war when he died of enteric fever at Bloemfontein in 1900.

Six others are buried in unmarked graves nearby.

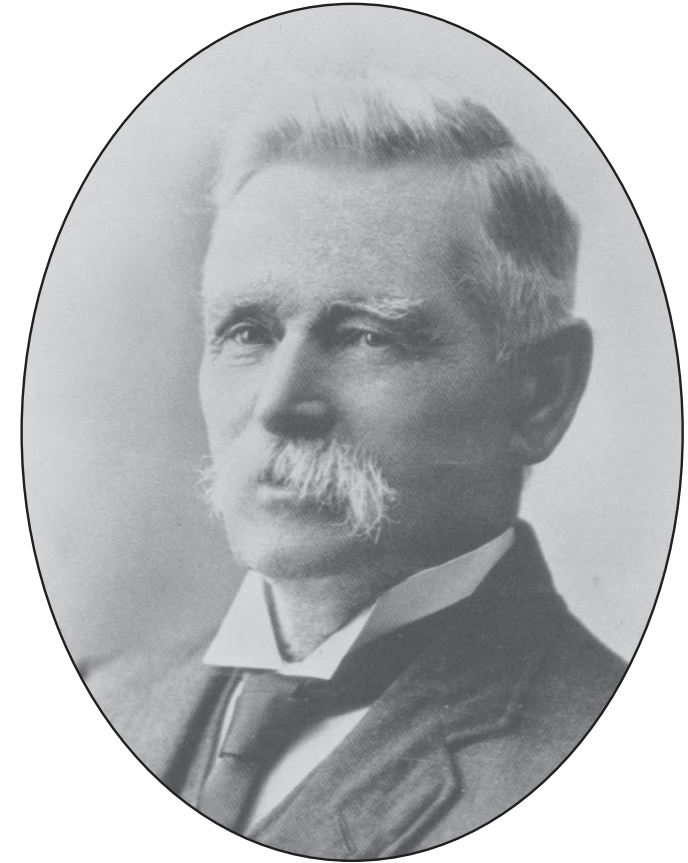

Charles Patterson

Charles Patterson, born 1844, emigrated from his birthplace in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, and arrived in Brisbane in 1871.

In 1875 he entered the sawmill business and with his brothers established the Bon Accord Sawmill at Brookfield. In the 1880s he moved to Toowong and built another saw mill. He was active in community politics, serving as Chairman in the Indooroopilly and Taringa Shire Councils, as one of the first members of the Toowong Municipal Council and as Toowong's first mayor, a position he held for three terms.

Patterson was made Life- Governor of the Children's Hospital and claimed fame for being the first man to drive a horse drawn dray to the summit of Mt Coot-tha.

He was also responsible for "Patterson's Folly", the stone-walled islands of lawns and trees in the middle of High street, Toowong, which he built to minimise upkeep of the wide street. He died in 1926.

Caskey Memorial

Lieutenant Lachlan John Caskey was born in Clifton, Queensland to Thomas and Margery Caskey in 1870. One of seven children, the family resided at Spring Creek. Caskey was well educated and eventually became a teacher. Lieutenant Lachlan John Caskey enlisted in February 1901 and embarked with the 5th Imperial Bushmen in March of 1901. Lieutenant Caskey was killed in action on the 27th of September 1901 in Mohari Drift, near the Caledon River in South Africa. His remains were buried by his comrades nearby.

Unveiled in May 1902, this is the first known monument to the South African War to be erected in Queensland. The monument was funded by public subscription. This obelisk, made of white Helidon sandstone and draped by a shroud, features emblems of Caskey's teaching career and sporting interests. A rare memorial to the Anglo-Boer conflict, this monument is a significant reminder of emerging nationalism and contemporary attitudes to war.

In addition to this monument a small plaque in his honour was erected in the Spring Creek State School; this was lost in a fire in 1912 and replica has been since erected at Allora State School. The Caskey Family is interred in the Allora General Cemetery.

Edward McGregor

Edward McGregor was born in Edinburgh in 1862. He worked in the Queensland Railways for 20 years before purchasing the Grosvenor Hotel. A few years later he built the Lyceum Theatre, George Street, which he ran until his death.

McGregor spoke several languages and toured the world twice. He was a keen music lover and was a patron of the Brisbane Municipal and Excelsior bands and Vice-Patron of the Scottish and Curlew choirs.

As President of the Schoolboys' Soccer Association, McGregor was largely responsible for the visit of the English soccer team in 1937. He died in 1939.

His wife, Mary Jane, predeceased him by eighteen years. McGregor is shown here in mourning for his wife at the age he was at the time of her death.

War Memorial

On Anzac Day 1920, after army chaplain Canon David Garland had returned from the war, he was visiting the graves of returned soldiers in the cemetery and found many people there on the same mission. He asked them whether they would like a service there and they eagerly agreed. For the next twenty years, Canon Garland read the memorial service at the Toowong Cemetery.

An ANZAC day commemoration committee was formed and it was decided badges would be sold to raise money for the care of the soldier's graves and to fund a memorial at the Toowong Cemetery. In July 1923 formal plans were laid before the commemoration committee. The Stone of Remembrance and Cross of Sacrifice were commissioned as they were in other Commonwealth war cemeteries. The Cross of Sacrifice and Stone of Remembrance were constructed in time for ANZAC Day the following year.

The Cross of Sacrifice and the Stone of Remembrance were unveiled on Anzac Day, 1924, by the Governor-General, Lord Forster. The Stone of Remembrance is a solid block of Helidon sandstone weighing ten tons. The inscription, "Their Name Liveth for Evermore" was composed by author Rudyard Kipling.

Thomas Welsby

Born in Ipswich in 1858 and educated at Ipswich Grammar School, Welsby joined the Bank of New South Wales in Brisbane in October 1874. Resigning as ledger keeper in May 1879, he joined the Australian Joint Stock Bank in Brisbane. In July 1884 he left to practice as a public accountant, trustee and auditor; he became a member of the Brisbane Stock Exchange, operated a shipping partnership and audited the Brisbane Municipal Council accounts until 1893.

A member of Booroodabin Divisional Board in 1893-1902 (chairman 1897-1900); Welsby was chairman of the New Farm State School committee and honorary treasurer of the Brisbane Chamber of Commerce. Instrumental in the formation of the Engineering Supply Co. of Australia in 1903, he was a director of the Royal Bank of Queensland. As chairman of directors of Queensland Brewery Ltd, Welsby stamped his commercial importance and made him one of Brisbane's elite.

Welsby was elected to the Legislative Assembly in 1909 where he served until 1915. A 'club man', tall, well-built and amiable, Welsby loved history and sport. Foundation honorary treasurer (1913), president (1936-37) and vice-president (1917-36, 1937-41) of the Historical Society of Queensland, he advocated that the government subsidise the society to collect Queensland's early records. He bequeathed his large library to the society.

Welsby died aged 83 on 3rd February 1941 at his New Farm home, Amity.

Petrie Family

The Petrie family is one of Queensland's oldest and most prominent. Andrew Petrie (buried elsewhere) is regarded as Queensland's first free settler, emigrating on the Stirling Castle from Edinburgh to Sydney in 1831 and then moving in 1837 to Brisbane to become Superintendent of Works. In 1840, he established the family stonemason business which from 1882-1981 was located opposite the main gates of Toowong Cemetery. This firm was responsible for much of the monumental masonry in this cemetery.

The Petries also built the GPO, Customs House and Parliament House, amongst other public buildings. John Petrie (1822-1892), Andrew's eldest son, was Brisbane's first Mayor from 1859 until 1861 and was an alderman for several years. As Mayor, he had the honour of receiving Sir George Bowen as Queensland's first Governor when the colony achieved separation from New South Wales in 1859.

Also a stonemason, John Petrie's best remembered work is the conversion of the windmill on Wickham Terrace to a signal station in 1861. John's son, Andrew Lang Petrie (1854-1928), a monumental mason and contractor, entered the Legislative Assembly on 29 April 1893 and remained a member until 7th May 1926.

George Rilatt

Born in 1844 in Lincolnshire, England, Rilatt came to Queensland aged twenty. He was the dedicated janitor of Brisbane Boys' Grammar School for 51 years from 1872 until his death in 1924, aged 80.

He selected the present site of Brisbane Grammar, built in 1880. As well as performing typical janitor's duties, he ran the tuckshop from the front of his own cottage, conducted an orchestra, attended to the school's banking and was involved in many aspects of school life.

The Old Boys' Association paid tribute to Rilatt's contribution to the school by erecting a memorial bell in the school grounds in his honour and this headstone which was dedicated in November 1931.

... And though the music he so loved around him
Came stealing with no earth note in the strain,
He would be happiest if the new life found him
Among "his boys" again.

Pioneer Children

Esther Roberts, mother of William Henry Roberts who is buried here, was the first teacher of girls in the Moreton Bay settlement. His father, Charles Roberts was transferred to Dunwich to take charge of the government store in August 1828. William was born on the 15th of September 1828 and died of illness on the 15th of November 1831. The tomb lid originally had a bible verse inscribed on it based on Matthew 19:14; Suffer the little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such belongeth the Kingdom of God. It has since been lost to weathering. After the death of their son, the Roberts family returned to Sydney in 1834.

Peter McCauley was born in Sydney on the 17th of April 1826, the son of Private Peter McCauley, a member of the 17th Regiment. His mother, Mary, was appointed as matron of the Brisbane Town Female Factory in June 1831. On the 5th of January 1832, young Peter wandered away from his brothers on an outing and drowned in the Brisbane River near the present Botanical Gardens. The family returned to Sydney in 1832.

Jane Pittard was the infant daughter of John Pittard, late Color Sergeant of the 57th Regiment. He had drowned in Van Diemen's Land on the 23rd of July 1831, shortly before his daughter's birth. Jane's mother, Margaret, remarried and came to Moreton Bay with Color Sergeant David Collins in August 1832. On the 23rd of January 1833, Jane died and her family returned to Sydney the following year.

Robert Russell Smellie

Born in 1823, Smellie was a pioneer of Brisbane's engineering and iron foundry trade. In the 1860s, he established Smellie and Co. in Alice Street. With the discovery of gold, Smellie turned his attention to importing mining machinery, agricultural implements and general hardware. The business flourished and larger premises were needed. The heritage listed Smellie and Co. warehouse, situated at 32 Edward Street, City was constructed in 1895 to accommodate Smellie's expanding interests. The Smellie firm was responsible for much of the iron railings found in this part of the cemetery. Smellie died in September 1898 aged 65 after a prolonged illness.

Bancroft Family

The Bancrofts are among Queensland's most notable medical families. After emigrating from England to Australia in 1864, Dr Joseph Bancroft (1836–1894) achieved world recognition for discovering the adult worm which caused the disease, Filariasis. Bancroft showed keen interest not only in the medical problems of the young colony but in those affecting stock and agriculture. He experimented with wheat, grapes and rice, endeavouring to find suitable varieties for the climate, and prepared reports on diseases of sugar cane and bananas. Bancroft also invented a process of drying and canning beef for export.

Joseph's son, Thomas Lane Bancroft (1860-1933) held numerous positions including Quarantine Officer of Brisbane, Government Medical Officer, and Medical Officer on Palm Island. Shy, generous and kindly, Thomas shunned publicity, and although his desire for a full time research appointment was never fulfilled, his contribution to natural science amounted to 84 research papers. He undertook investigations ranging from blood parasites of birds to Aboriginal food-plants and hybridization of cotton.

Prominent medical practitioner, Dr Peter Bancroft (1862-1911) was the great-nephew of Dr Joseph Bancroft. He excelled in his medical studies at the University of Sydney before entering practice in Brisbane. He was associated with the Lady Lamington Hospital since its inception in 1900. He is also known for his research work with hookworm.

Trooper John Cobb

Cobb was born in 1857. A volunteer in the Third (Queensland Mounted Infantry) Contingent to the South African War, Cobb sailed from Brisbane in March 1900 and saw action at the relief of Mafeking. In operations west of Pretoria they took part in the defence of Eland's river camp during August 1900 and later in November at Rhinoster Kop, both significant battles of that conflict. Contrary to popular belief, Trooper Cobb was not wounded in South Africa and returned unscathed to Brisbane where the contingent was disbanded on 20th June 1901. He died of an apparent stroke on 3rd July 1901 and was buried with full military honours.

This memorial, commissioned by his relatives, was constructed by A.L. Petrie out of Helidon freestone. It is an accurate representation of the emu-plumed hat, rifle and bandolier issued to the men who served in South Africa.

John Turner

John Sargent Turner was born in Wangaroa, New Zealand in 1826, to Reverend Nathaniel Turner (1793-1864), a Wesleyan Missionary (whose tomb lies behind this monument), and Anne Turner, nee Sargent. In 1852, John Turner migrated to Brisbane and opened the Brisbane Branch of the Union Bank. In 1871 he relinquished his management position to join the established firm of George Raff and Co. Turner retired from business when the company dissolved in 1882. He was director of several businesses including Queensland Mercantile, the Australian Mutual Providence Society and the South Australian Land and Mortgage Company. On 18th April 1876, he entered the Legislative Council where he remained until his death. He is regarded as the founder of the Albert Street Uniting Church.

Turner was a trustee of the Lady Bowen Hospital. He was also a founding member of the Queensland Acclimatisation Society and was passionate about flowers and gardening. He died in July 1900 of heart failure.

Raff Brothers

George Raff (1815-1889) was born in Forres, Morayshire, Scotland. He was a successful merchant, sugar-grower and a founding Queensland politician. Raff arrived in Sydney in January 1839 on the Earl Durham. He had commercial interests in Victoria before arriving in Queensland in 1851. His efforts were largely responsible for the direct wool trade between Brisbane and London. He used Melanesian labour on his plantations and in 1869 gave evidence to a select committee on Pacific Island labour. Raff strongly believed in Queensland's separation from New South Wales and, after this was achieved in 1859, represented Brisbane in the first parliament. He held the seat until 1867.

Alexander Raff (1820-1914) arrived in New South Wales in 1845. After gaining experience in Victoria, he became a pastoralist on the Darling Downs and a company director. He was a director of the Scottish Australian Land and Mortgage Company, Brisbane Gas Company, Agricultural Company and the National Mutual Life Association. From 1884 until 1910, he was a member of the Legislative Council.

They were the sons of James Raff and his wife Margaret Cumming.

Finney and Isles

The graves of Thomas Finney (1837-1903), and James Isles (1837 - 1888) who together established Finney Isles and Co. appropriately lie side by side.

Finney was born in Galway, Ireland and educated privately. In 1856, he began work in a drapery business in Dublin. In 1862, with his workmate James Isles, arrived in Brisbane and two years later they bought a drapery business in Ann Street, Fortitude Valley. The business rapidly expanded and in 1909 the well known Queen Street store was built. The firm was eventually taken over by David Jones Ltd.

In 1866, following the death of his first wife, Thomas Finney married Sidney Ann Jackson whose sister, Isabella, married James Isles. Finney was a licensing justice, a member of the Brisbane Board of Water Works and the Fire Brigade Board. He was also president of the Commercial Rowing Club. He was long a member of the Toowong Shire Council and in 1896 yielded to pressure from his friends and associates and stood successfully for the Toowong seat in the Legislative Assembly; in the 1898 election he retained the seat. In parliament he continued his campaign to improve conditions for shop assistants and similar workers. Finney was always interested in the welfare of his employees and had in 1879 pioneered 6 p.m. closing in Brisbane stores. He died after a long period of declining health on the 16th of December 1903.

Friends of Toowong Cemetery Association

James Isles died of apoplexy at his Clayfield Home on the 3rd of November 1888 aged only 51. The Brisbane Courier estimated that nearly 1000 people were present at his burial.

Dorothy Hawthorn

Dorothy Hawthorn's (1900-1983) many achievements and contributions to the community are well documented on her grave. Also buried here are her father, Arthur George Hawthorn, a Federal Cabinet Minister, and her grandparents, Alexander and Ann Stewart, foundation members of the St Andrews Church, Brisbane.

Hawthorn made an outstanding contribution to the Girl Guide Association. As Deputy State Commissioner and Commissioner in Charge of Training she toured extensively throughout Queensland establishing Guide companies. In 1936 she learned how to fly at Archerfield. During World War Two, she served as a training officer in the Women's Auxiliary Australian Air Force, based in Malvern, Victoria. After the war, Hawthorn was appointed a Commonwealth rehabilitation officer with the responsibility of assisting service women re-enter civilian life. In the 1950s, Hawthorn was the President of the Women's Section of the Queensland Country party.

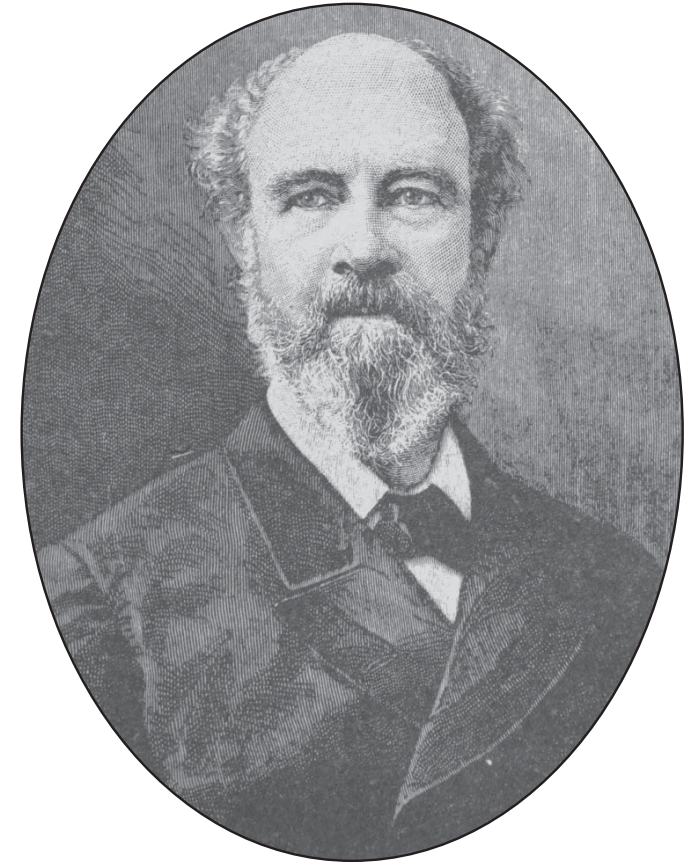

Sir Anthony Musgrave

Musgrave was born on 17 November 1828 at Antigua, West Indies, son of Dr Anthony Musgrave and his wife Mary, née Sheriff. Educated in the West Indies, he became private secretary at twenty-one to the Governor of the Leeward Islands. In 1851 he was admitted to the Inner Temple, London, but returned to Antigua where he served as Colonial Secretary from 1854-60.

In 1853 he had married Christiana Elizabeth Byam who died in 1858. Musgrave was Administrator of Nevis from October 1860 to April 1861, then of St Vincent and in May 1862 became Lieutenant-governor. Musgrave governed Newfoundland between 1864 and 1869.

At San Francisco en route to a new post in British Columbia he married Jeannie Lucinda Field by whom he had three sons. He was transferred to Natal in 1872. On 6 March 1873 Musgrave became Governor of South Australia suffering a personal tragedy when his young daughter died of burns shortly afterwards. In 1877 he was appointed Governor of Jamaica.

After six years, he became governor of Queensland on 21 July 1883. He visited England in 1886 and planned to retire but in June 1888 Sir Thomas McIlwraith, whom he detested, became premier. The two soon clashed over the governor's right to exercise of the prerogative of mercy. Musgrave appealed to the Colonial Office when McIlwraith defied him. A few weeks later Musgrave died at Government House on 9 October 1888.

Bell Family

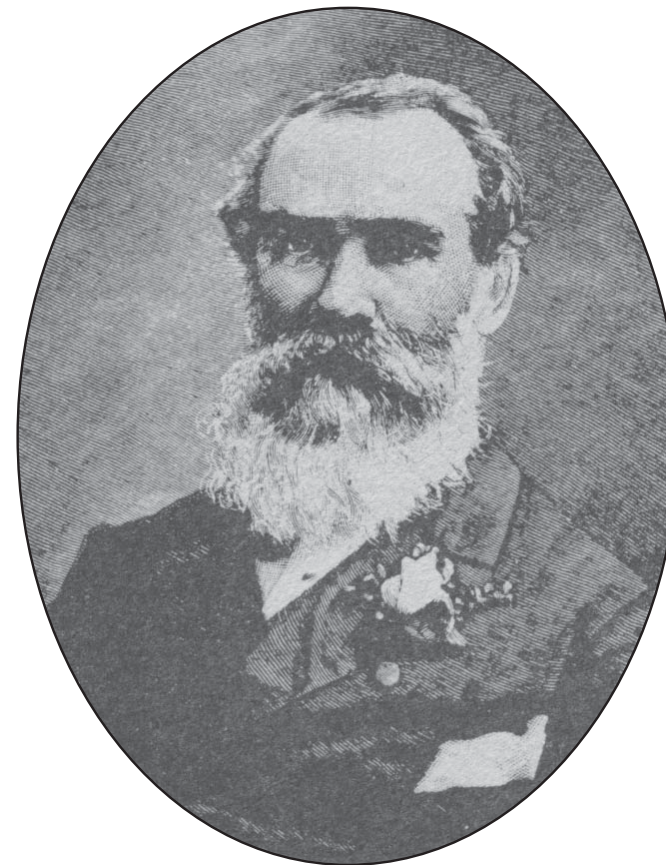

Sir Joshua Peter Bell (pictured) was a squatter and politician. He was born in 1827 in County Kildare, Ireland. Bell's Jimbour Station became one of the most successful on the Darling Downs. He was a prize breeder of horses, winning all important races on the Queensland racing calendar. For many years he was President of the Queensland Turf Club. In his day Bell was considered a dandy, as he was always immaculately dressed. The highlights of Bell's political career, which began in 1860, are listed on his headstone. On 20th December 1881, Bell died suddenly in a cab in Queen Street.

Joshua Thomas Bell (1863-1911), a barrister and politician, was the eldest son of Joshua Peter Bell. Bell was a skilful campaigner and public speaker, but his elegant appearance and pompous attitude alienated many of his peers. He was a keen rower and rifle-shooter and patron of the arts, securing the first cultural grant in Queensland. After a varied political career, Bell became the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, the position he held at the time of his death.

Sir Maurice O'Connell

Maurice Charles O'Connell was the grandson of Governor William Bligh, commander of the infamous HMAS Bounty and Governor of New South Wales from 1805. Born in Sydney in 1812 and educated in Europe, O'Connell raised and led a regiment of Irish volunteers in the Spanish Carlist wars, rising to the rank of General in the British Auxiliary Legion. Before leaving for Spain, he married Eliza Emily le Geyt at Jersey. When the legion was disbanded, O'Connell sailed back to New South Wales with several Spanish decorations and in 1845 was elected to the New South Wales Legislative Council. He was a founding member of the Queensland Legislative Council, following the colony's separation from New South Wales in 1859. He was granted a knighthood in 1868 when, as administrator of the government, he was host to the Duke of Edinburgh. He died at Parliament House on 23rd March 1879, leaving no children.

Sir Arthur Palmer

Arthur Hunter Palmer was the seventh Premier of Queensland, serving from 1870 until 1874. Born in Ireland in 1819, Palmer immigrated to New South Wales in 1838 where he worked on Henry Dangar's stations for 23 years, rising to the position of general manager. In 1861 he moved to Queensland and became a pastoralist. In 1866 he entered the Legislative Assembly and pursued a political career which included ministerial positions as Minister of Lands and Works and Public Instruction, the Colonial Secretary in various governments and a term as Premier. From 1881-1898 Palmer was President of the Legislative Council and as such from May to November 1883 and from October 1888 to May 1889 he acted as administrator of the colony in the absence of the governor and from November 1895 to April 1896 was the first lieutenant-governor of the colony. He died in March 1898 at his home Easton Gray, Toowong.

Governor Blackall

Samuel Wensley Blackall was the second Governor of Queensland, serving between 1868 and 1871. Born in Dublin in 1809, Blackall's colonial service began in 1851 when he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Dominica for six years. From 1862 until 1865 he was Governor of Sierra Leone and then became Governor in Chief of the West African Settlements. During his two years as Governor of Queensland he became extremely popular, as he had the gift of making friends and was willing to help public causes. After the government of the day designated this area of Toowong as a cemetery, Blackall's ill health prompted him to choose this plot for his grave. On the 3rd of January 1871, Blackall was the first to be buried here and his impressive memorial continues to dominate the Toowong Cemetery.

This plaque was unveiled by Her Excellency Ms Penelope Wensley, AC Governor of Queensland, on the 24th July 2011 to mark the 140th anniversary of the commencement of Toowong Cemetery.

Sir Samuel Walker Griffith

This modest grave belies the vital contribution this man made to Queensland and Australian politics and law. Griffith was born in Merthyr Tydfil, Wales in 1845. He graduated from Sydney University in 1862 with Honours in maths and classics and commenced practising law in Brisbane.

Griffith's political career began in 1872 when he won the seat of East Moreton. He served as Attorney-General from 1874 to 1878 and in May 1879 replaced John Douglas as Liberal Party leader. During this rise to leadership he held three portfolios: Attorney-General, Secretary for Public Works Instruction (1876-1879) and Secretary for Public Works (1878-1879). Griffith was a delegate at the Intercolonial Convention 1883. Subsequently, Griffith was Vice-President of the National Australasian Convention of 1891 and Chairman of the Drafting Committee which prepared the draft constitution. Griffith was indeed a "founding father" of Australia's constitution and Federation. In 1893 Griffith left government to become Chief Justice of Queensland and from 1903 to 1919 was the first Chief Justice of the High Court of Australia. During this period he translated Dante's Divine Comedy from Italian, which was published by Oxford University Press in 1911.

He died on the 9th of August 1920 at his grand home Merthyr which gave its name to a locality in New Farm. The funeral cortege was described by the newspapers as the largest ever seen in Brisbane.

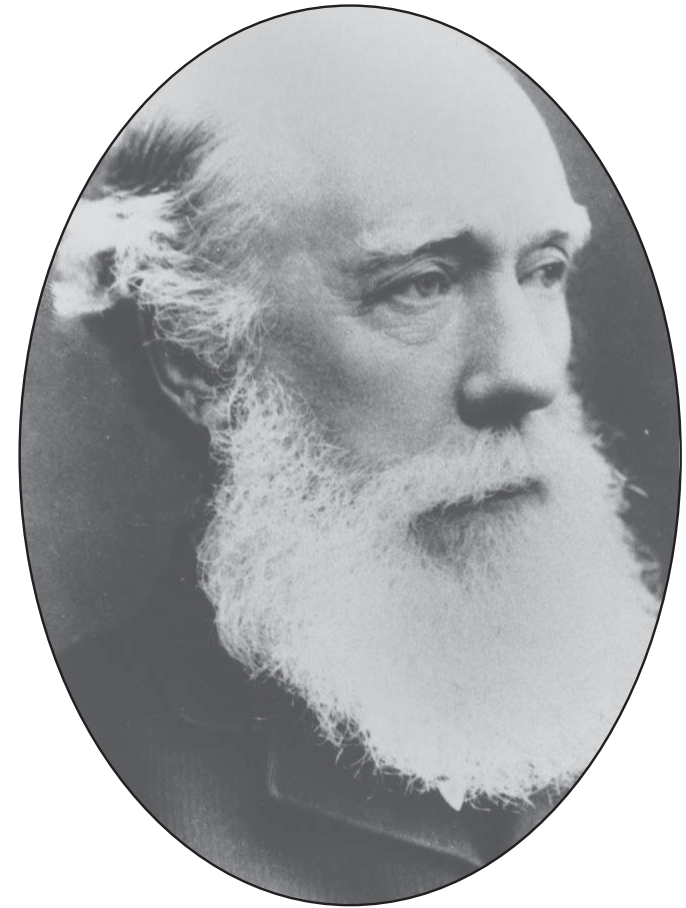

Sir Charles Lilley

Born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, England in 1830, Lilley arrived in Sydney in 1856 as an assisted immigrant. That year he was articled in Brisbane to Robert Little, the district's senior solicitor. On completing his articles he joined the printer William Bellbridge to lease the Moreton Bay Courier and became involved in the Separation movement.

Following separation in 1859, Lilley narrowly won the Fortitude Valley seat and continued to represent that electorate until the end of his parliamentary career. In 1865 he became Attorney-General in the Herbert Ministry and in 1868 gained the unusual dual role of Premier and Attorney-General. In 1869, as Colonial Secretary, he was responsible for establishing free education throughout Queensland, making it the first Australian state to do so.

In 1874 he was appointed a Judge of the Supreme Court and in Jun 1879 became Chief Justice. He accepted a knighthood in October 1881. Lilley died in August 1897.

Robert Cribb

Cribb was born in at Poole, Dorset, England. He arrived in Brisbane aboard the Fortitude on 20th January 1849 as a migrant in one of the Reverend John Dunmore Lang's schemes. He built his home, Dunmore, at Milton and became a successful land speculator. He bought land in 1852 and built Lang Farm which stretched from the hilly part of Indooroopilly Road towards Jack Cook Park and down to the River. He cleared the pine trees and vines growing along Toowong Creek, growing oranges, cabbages, grapes, mulberries and olives. Robert also served on Brisbane's first municipal council and represented North Brisbane in Queensland's first parliament. Cribb was appointed to the first Toowong Shire Council in 1880. He died on 16 April 1893 aged 88.

His younger brother, Benjamin, emigrated aboard another of Lang's ships, the Chaseley and went to Ipswich. In 1855, he established the Cribb and Foote Department Store which served the Ipswich people for more than 120 years. This business arrangement became a family concern with the marriage of Robert's son, John, to Lucy Foote.

John Melville

John Melville, the first overseer, devoted most of his life to Toowong Cemetery. He was born in Hertfordshire in 1835 and in 1849 came to Queensland with his parents under the guidance of Reverend John Dunmore Lang aboard the Fortitude where the family took up dairy farming at South Brisbane. In 1851 when the gold diggings broke out in Victoria, Melville went, to try his luck but returned to Brisbane at Christmas 1854 to visit his family. He then met Augustus Gregory and was asked to join his Great Northern exploration party for the purpose of exploring the Victoria and Albert Rivers in search of grazing land and natural resources, an invitation which he accepted. The expedition lasted sixteen months and journeyed more than 2000 miles by sea and 5000 by land. In 1858 John Melville again joined Gregory in search of the lost explorer Leichardt. After returning from the expedition Melville was engaged in survey work until 1871 when he acted as chainman to George Phillips, who had been engaged to survey part of the present cemetery at Toowong and in 1873 he was appointed overseer of the cemetery by the Trustees which position he held for 38 years. He married Emily Allen in 1877 and had five surviving children. He was succeeded in his position by his son J. L. Melville.

The Melvilles lived in a house, later demolished, on part of the cemetery reserve where the bus depot is now. John died aged 77 on the 8th of March 1912.

Ann and Walter Hill

Ann Hill (born 1850) was the second person buried in the Toowong Cemetery, eleven months after Governor Blackall, on the 3rd of November 1871. She was the daughter of Walter and Jane Hill and died aged 21 from a lung complaint.

Walter Hill was born in 1820 in Scotsdyke, Dumfriesshire, Scotland. After training at the Royal Botanical Gardens of Edinburgh and Kew he was appointed Superintendent of the Brisbane Botanical Gardens on February 20, 1855. Later he was designated Director and Government Botanist. He retired in 1881 and died at Eight Mile Plains in 1904. Walter Hill was responsible for introducing the jacaranda and poinciana trees to Australia and also for the distribution of the mango and pawpaw amongst others throughout Queensland.

As a tribute to Walter Hill, The Walter Hill fountain was erected in the city botanical gardens and a memorial plaque here was unveiled by Lord Mayor Clem Jones in 1972.

John Donaldson

Donaldson was born in Victoria in 1841. He became a pastoralist in Queensland in 1881. He was a manager and director of the Union Mortgage and Agency Co. in 1885. He was also President of the Queensland branch of the Australian Natives' Association. Donaldson was a member of the Legislative Assembly from 1883 to 1893 for the seat of Warrego and later Bulloo. He served as Post Master General and was appointed Colonial Treasurer in 1889. Donaldson was also a local director of the Commercial Bank of Australia, a director of the Queensland Deposit Bank and Building Society

In March 1891, he was one of the Queensland delegates to the National Australasian Convention at Sydney where he unsuccessfully urged that control of all the railways be given to the federal government. Proud of his heritage, he was vice-president of the various Scottish societies and was associated with many different sporting organisations.

He died from kidney disease on 25 July 1896 at his Coorparoo home.

Sir Arthur Rutledge

Rutledge was born on the 29th of August, 1843 in Penrith New South Wales, the son of James and Lucy Rutledge. His father's work brought the family to Moreton Bay and then back to Sydney. It was here that Arthur began his career in the legal and mercantile professions. However in 1865 he was ordained as a Wesleyan Minister. He married Mary Thomas Rabone in 1869 in Surrey Hills. His ministry took him around rural areas of New South Wales and to Brisbane where he settled in 1875. Rutledge left the ministry encouraged and supported financially by George Cowlshaw to study law. From 1878 to 1893 and 1899 to 1904 he was a member of the Legislative Assembly. He served five years as Queensland's Attorney General from 1883. Rutledge was admitted as a barrister in 1878 and became a QC in 1899. He was knighted in 1902 after a visit from the Duke and Duchess of York. Having failed to secure his seat of Nundah in the 1904 election he became acting judge in the Supreme Court. On 22 March 1906 Rutledge was appointed judge of District Courts, and held this office for the rest of his life. During this period he also acted in rotation with his fellow judges as chairman of the Land Appeal Court. Rutledge married Rose Ann Davey in Melbourne on 21 June 1910. Survived by his wife, and three sons and four daughters of his first marriage, he died in Sydney on 8 February 1917.

Thomas Macdonald-Paterson

Macdonald-Paterson arrived in Rockhampton from Scotland in 1861 as an eighteen year old. He worked at a butchery before moving to Brisbane, where he qualified as a solicitor. He was a member for the Queensland Central Separation League and National Association.

Macdonald- Paterson served as mayor of Rockhampton in 1870. He was a member of the Legislative Assembly from 1878 to 1885 and again from 1896 to 1901. He was a member of the Legislative Council in the intervening period. He served in three tiers of government as he was the Brisbane Federal Member of the House of Representatives from 1901 to 1903. Macdonald-Paterson was one of seven Queensland delegates to the National Australasian Convention of 1891. His main claims at the convention were for uniform financial legislation and the abolition of the right to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. He died in March 1906.

Anne Devoy

Born at Donadea near Hodgetown County Kildare, Ireland in 1817, Devoy was the daughter of James and Honor Reilly. Her mother was the daughter of the Countess de Farnton, who escaped the guillotine in the French Revolution, and fled to Ireland to take up refuge with her friend, the Earl of Kildare at Castle Kilkea. Anne married Patrick Devoy and with the union came the 'curse' of the Devoys. This had been placed on a Devoy of Huguenot stock who turned in a Catholic priest to Cromwell's men. As he was taken away, the priest blessed all the Devoy women and cursed the men so that no male Devoy would live to see his son in manhood. The Devoys arrived in Queensland in 1864 on the Landsborough after selling their land in Ireland to the Ursuline nuns.

They brought a young family with them; John (later managing director of XXXX), Marguerite and Annie. In the tradition of the curse Patrick Devoy was killed the same year by a landslide while selecting land near Toowoomba. Anne died in 1908 aged 90.

Joseph Darragh

Born in Cookstown, County Tyrone, Ireland in 1827, Darragh landed in Moreton Bay in 1850 with his wife. For the first three years he worked as a butcher for Patrick Mayne, a relative. Subsequently he established a butcher shop at Kangaroo Point which he ran for twenty-one years. During this period he was elected an alderman, and for four years represented the Kangaroo Point Ward in the Brisbane Municipal Council.

In 1878 he visited his homeland, Europe including the Paris Exhibition, and America. On his return to Queensland he engaged in various business and speculative enterprises, both in Brisbane and Sandgate. He was also a justice of the peace. Darragh Street, Kangaroo Point is named after the family. When he died in October 1902 Darragh was 'of Independent Means'.

William Grene Power

Born at Clonmel, Tipperary in 1835 the son of Edward Power and Mary Ann Grene, Power was educated at Carlow by the Christian Brothers. He arrived in Victoria in 1857 and was a miner and brewer on the goldfields at Bendigo and Ballarat.

He served as Mayor of Jamiestown, Victoria in 1866. He arrived in Queensland 1869 at the request of his old friends Messrs Perkins and Gooley to manage Browns Brewery (later Perkins & Co.) and married Perkins's sister Mary Therese and settled in Brisbane 1873. Power was a Member of the Legislative Council from 1883 to until his death. He died at Nundah on the 14th of August 1903 and was buried here the next day by Rev. Fr. Byrne.

James Thomas Mooney

Mooney was born in New York in 1855, the son of Joseph and Rosa Mooney, natives of County Cavan. They arrived in Sydney 1857 on the FitzJames. Mooney was a volunteer fireman who was fatally burned by an exploding cask of spirits during a fire at Hughes' grocery store in Queen Street in March 1877. The fire bell was tolled for an hour when his death became known.

His mother was publican of the Exchange Hotel in Albert Street from where his funeral procession left. Shops along the funeral route were closed in his honour. His headstone was financed by public subscription. Mooney was also a volunteer corporal in the Engineering Corps which supplied the firing party at the burial.

His father's sister was Mary, wife of James Mayne, hide merchant in Tyrone, brother of Patrick Mayne.

John Ahern

Ahern was born at Donickmore, County Cork, Ireland in 1838. He was a Catholic farmer when he joined the Queensland Police Force in September 1864. He was sent to Springsure in October and promoted to Senior Constable/Acting Sergeant in July 1868. He became Inspector of Slaughterhouses in the Mitchell district in February 1870 and received the substantial reward of £15 in September 1872 for 'energetic perseverance in suppressing cattle-stealers in the Barcoo and Walgett districts'.

Ahern was promoted to Senior Sergeant in January 1874 and Sub-Inspector 2nd class in 1877. He served at Blackall in 1880 where he became Sub-Inspector 1st class. Ahern married in 1883 Mary, sister of Andrew Joseph Thynne from County Clare. By 1890, he had been promoted to Inspector 1st class in charge of all brands throughout the colony. Ahern was a most respected and energetic policeman. He died in September 1893 from complications from back surgery.

Thomas Joseph Byrnes

Byrnes was born in Brisbane in November 1860, the son of immigrants from County Sligo, Ireland. Byrnes taught at Xavier College, Kew, Melbourne from 1882-83 before being admitted to the Victorian Bar in 1884. He established a legal firm in Brisbane 1885 and became a Supreme Court barrister in due course. He entered politics as an MLC and served as Attorney-General in 1893 and MLA from 1893-98. Byrnes was the Colonial Prime Minister (Premier) of Queensland in 1898 but his promising life was cut short at the early age of 38 in September 1898 by an attack of measles followed by pneumonia. His State Funeral was attended by both sides of government and was one of the largest Brisbane had ever seen. His funeral was conducted by Archbishop Dunne and to his memory are memorials in Centennial Park, Brisbane and in the main street of Warwick, his electorate. Byrnes never married.

John Leahy

Leahy was born at Schull, County Cork, Ireland in 1854. He arrived in Brisbane 1874 and was appointed Post Master at Windorah before settling at Thargomindah in 1883. Leahy married Annie Colbert in 1886. He was a member of the Bulloo Divisional Board 1889-1893. A successful grazier, Leahy was President of the Woolbrokers' Association. He was part owner of the Thargomindah Herald established by his younger brother Patrick James Leahy, and proprietor of the Royal Hotel 1886-1889. Leahy's political career as member for Bulloo 1893 to 1909 saw him as Secretary for the Railways and Public Works 1907-09. He held many directorships including the Queensland Meat Export Co., Estate and Mortgage Co., and the National Agricultural Association of Queensland. He was also a member of Brisbane Chamber of Commerce and on the executive of the Queensland Irish Association. Leahy died at his home in New Farm in January 1909 and was buried after a state funeral.

Thomas Joseph Ryan

Ryan was born at Boothapool near Port Fairy, Victoria, in 1875 the son of Irish immigrants. Ryan completed his education at the University of Melbourne and studied law while teaching classics at Church Grammar, Launceston, Tasmania. He obtained his degree in 1899. After being admitted to the Queensland Bar in December 1901, his political career followed. He joined the Labor Party in 1904 and by December 1912 was party leader. Winning the elections in 1915, he became Premier of Queensland, Chief Secretary and Attorney General.

With John Fihelly, he drafted the Workers Compensation Bill, created the State Government Insurance Office, set up the Public Curators Office and the Golden Casket Agency. He supported voting rights for 18 year olds and gave women the right to stand for Parliament. Entering Federal politics he won the seat of West Sydney in 1919 and was elected Deputy Leader of the House of Representatives. He suffered from ill health and a bout of influenza caught in England in 1919 later resulted in his death from pneumonia in 1921 at Barcaldine. Archbishops Duhig (Brisbane) and Mannix (Melbourne) presided over his state funeral from St Stephen's Cathedral.

A memorial bronze statue stands in Queens Park on the corner of William and Elizabeth Streets.

O'Doherty was born in Dublin, in 1823. He studied at the Catholic School of Medicine in 1844. He was convicted as a 'Young Irelander' and transported to Sydney and then to Hobart in 1848. After five years he was given a conditional pardon (not allowed to return to Ireland) and went to Paris before secretly marrying poet Mary Eva Kelly (Eva of The Nation) in London in 1855. In 1856 O'Doherty received a full pardon and went to Dublin to obtain his medical degree. They then migrated to Victoria in 1860 and to Brisbane where he set up practice in Ipswich in 1862.

By 1866, he was a leading medical practitioner in Brisbane, and personal physician to Bishop Quinn. He was also the first President of the Queensland Medical Board. He was an MLA for Brisbane in 1867 and MLC 1877 - 1885 and also returned to Ireland as the Nationalist Member for Meath 1885-1888. As a founding member of the Queensland Hibernian Society and the Queensland Irish Association, O'Doherty was well respected and presided over the St. Patrick's Day Committee.

He died in July 1905 survived by his wife and only one of his eight children.

The Queensland Irish Association raised this monument over his grave.

Mary Douglas

Born Mary Ann Simpson, c. 1828, she was the third daughter of the Reverend William West Simpson M.A., a Church of England minister, who immigrated to New South Wales in 1840. At 34 years old and twice-widowed Mary met and married the distinguished bachelor, John Douglas in Sydney. Douglas was the nephew of the Marquis of Queensbury, a former pupil of Rugby School, and graduate of Durham University.

Mary Douglas moved into the spotlight of Queensland public life in June 1865 when her ladies' committee of the Brisbane Hospital was to be the beginning of institutional care for orphaned, destitute and neglected children in Queensland. By the end of 1865 the child-rescue institution at the Fever Hospital had become a busy centre for the increasing number of children unable to be cared for.

In November 1876, Mary Douglas was travelling in her pony-drawn gig from her home to Brisbane when she was involved in an accident close to Newstead House gates, Breakfast Creek her gig overturned throwing Mary out. She died twelve hours later from severe injuries.

Mary was well known throughout Brisbane for her charitable works, prominent in the management of the Brisbane Servants Home, the Lady Bowen Lying-in Hospital, and a founder of the Diamantina Orphanage.

Florence Griffiths Buchanan

Florence was born on 16 September 1861 at Canterbury, Kent. Orphaned when young, Florence became the ward of a relation at Torquay, Devon. Despite her health and near blindness, she devoted herself as a young woman to both charity and prayer. In 1887 she accompanied her two brothers to Bundaberg, Queensland. Seriously injured in a riding accident in 1888, she was left permanently crippled. After teaching her Melanesian servants English and Bible stories, she later assumed responsibility for the nondenominational South Seas Evangelical Mission (also known as the Queensland Kanaka Mission). In addition she served as Queensland secretary of both the International Scripture Union and the Young Women's Christian Association, and maintained at her own expense a hostel for English migrant girls.

After her home was destroyed in the 1893 floods, Florence Buchanan lived at Townsville and helped Bishop C. G. Barlow to administer his diocese. Two years later she worked among the multi-racial communities of divers on Thursday Island. She was forced to go to London for surgery. On her return she met Kashiwagi Taira, an educated storekeeper who introduced her into the usually closed Japanese community.

In 1906 Miss Buchanan was engaged first as a teacher and later as acting headmistress of the famed Singapore Chinese Girls' School; she also taught the orphans at St Mary's Home in Singapore. In 1907 she again underwent major surgery in London and, upon recovery, returned to Thursday Island and was ordained a deaconess in January 1908. Florence Buchanan resigned her charge of the mission in 1911 because of deteriorating health, but she stayed on as a teacher. She died of tuberculosis in St Helen's Methodist Hospital on 30 December 1911.

She was profoundly mourned throughout the Torres Strait.

Elizabeth Jane Kingsbury

Few women have left so clear a track successfully blazed in the history of Queensland. Elizabeth Kingsbury was for years on the committee of the Sick Children's Hospital. When the establishment of a woman's hospital was urged by Lady Lamington, Elizabeth became one of the first members of the committee, relinquishing her guiding hand only when success had come to the institution. She became president of the Industrial Home for Women at Normanby Hill, and later the first president of the Queen Alexandra Home for orphans, neglected, or poor children. Elizabeth practically illustrated the doctrine of keeping the home fires burning during war time by strengthening existing activities and at the same time, as president of the National Council of Women, she took an active part in 'Six o'clock closing' campaign, the establishment of a bureau for the registration and classification of women for national work, and the foundation of the British Australian League. She was elected president of the Women's Mutual Service club, and, with her committee, brightened with kindly sympathy the many weary hours of sorrow and anxiety of soldiers' relatives. For eight years, Elizabeth occupied the position of president of the National Council of Women. On the occasion of the International Congress held in Rome in June, 1914, she represented the Queensland Council, and on her return familiarized the women of Brisbane with the representations of women from other countries. Elizabeth was also an accomplished artist and wood carver. She died in 1919 aged 61.
